Aravin.S Lab 6 PART II

1. An argument in C is the value that is passed within a function when the function is called. Parameters are the variables that are defined during a function declaration or definition. The return statement can terminate a function or return a value to a calling function.
2. The "*" operator gives the value at the address of a variable and the & operator gives the address of the variable.